PHILOLOGY IN A GLOBAL AGE

Dienstag · 14.12.2010 · 18:30 Uhr
Phil G · Von-Melle-Park 6

Digital technology and the global society that it has enabled poses challenges to the philologist: an apparent de-emphasis on language in general and an increased shift away from deep reading run contrary to the traditional values of Philology. But if we follow the implications of a global society and turn the potential unleashed by new digital technologies to our own purposes, then we can forge a path that departs radically from 20th century practice, affirms our most ancient goals, and contributes essentially and visibly to the development of a new society of letters, one that builds new relationships and connections across barriers of language and culture. This talk describes where this path may lead and how we can get there.
